Summary

As the first & only peace-psychologist from Kashmir & South-Asia, I work at the intersection of the science of psychology, mental health psychosocial support, arts, education, conflict transformation, culture and peacebuilding. My vision of peace is very much foundational in holistic global wellbeing, mental health psychosocial support, transformation, changemaking & inner peace first, for more - empowered, empathetic, cohesive, just and wellbeing-oriented world. I've actively taken peace-psychology from theory into practice on-ground. I have worked in Kashmir, Myanmar & parts of India-South Asia, & the USA in the past decade exploring intersectionalities in different sectors & with different groups/communities at grassroots, management & policymaking levels. I support many individuals/organizations locally & globally through volunteer experiential workshops, designing interventions, facilitating dialogues, implementing strategies, mentoring, advocacy. In Kashmir, I've voluntarily been working with artists, half-widows, orphans, youth, women, journalists, students, teachers & others in the past decade.

My work is aimed at impacting individuals, communities & systems, online and on-ground, to – help cope up with the ramifications of living in conflict situation/zones, facilitate culturally relevant decolonized approaches of healing, counteract the enforced normal, create community safe spaces for expression, share relevant resources - all while advocating for justice, and building more empathy, understanding, dialogue; and space for positive peacebuilding in the process. I've been advocating for contextualized MHPSS, YPS-WPS & wellbeing-oriented approaches towards peacebuilding; & am now influencing policy-level changes on these intersections with international-forums like IASC & UN75.

Over the years, I've presented my Peace-psychology work, created impact & received recognition from international-forums including the World Economic Forum's Global Shaper Hub (Shape South-Asia Summit), UN Women, Nobel Peace Prize forums (USA),
